1 Exam

General Instructions:

- Draw on at least five of the assigned course readings.
- Make it clear how the readings are connected and how they help you answer the question. Remember that it is key to account for and use the texts we have worked with to answer the exam question.
- Substantiate your arguments with ethnographic/empirical examples from the assigned readings. Avoid simply repeating the authors' argument and do not make use of long quotes.
- If you quote directly from one of the course readings, please indicate the quoted text with quotation marks ("...") and cite the page number. For example, you might write: As Janet Carsten (1975: 58) argues, kinship studies "in the midtwentieth century, too, could hardly isolate kinship from gender".
- You can use non-course readings but remember that you will primarily be assessed on your engagement with the course literature.

Exam Questions:

Choose one of the three questions below (question 1, 2 or 3). Only answer one question.

1. Perceptions of kinship, gender, and sexuality are constantly negotiated, constructed, and reconstructed within and between societies and social groups. Use different ethnographic examples and arguments from the curricular readings to discuss how kinship and gender theories can help us understand these processes.
2. Within contemporary anthropology, kinship and gender are viewed as mutually constitutive. Discuss how this insight is important for understanding capitalist structures in our contemporary world.
3. What role do states and policies play in the making and unmaking of gender and kinship? Discuss with reference to the ethnography and curricular readings discussed in class.
