1 Exam

General Instructions:

- Draw on at least five of the assigned course readings. Make it clear how they help answer the question and how the readings relate to each other. Remember that it is key to account for and use the texts we have worked with to answer the exam question.
- Substantiate your arguments with ethnographic/empirical examples from the assigned readings. Avoid to only repeat the authors' argument.
- You can use non-course readings but again, remember that you will primarily be assessed on your engagement with the course literature.
- Don't make use of too long quotes. If you quote directly from one of the course readings, please indicate the quoted text with quotation marks ("") and cite the page number. For example, you might write: As Janet Carsten (1975: 58) argues, kinship studies "in the mid-twentieth century, too, could hardly isolate kinship from gender.

Exam Questions:

Choose one of the three questions below (question 1, 2 or 3). Only answer one question.

1. How can a focus on care and different arrangement of domestic work add to our understanding of gender and kinship?
2. The body and bodies will always be at the frontline of power, gender systems and kinship ideals. Why is that so?
3. Why is it important to include capitalism in the study of kinship and gender systems in our contemporary world?

Good luck!
